We live in anxious times. Often congregations become places where stresses in society, the workplace and our personal lives play out in destructive ways. And, congregations must deal with their own anxieties as they try to be the Church of Christ in difficult times. In any system, the most important people who can affect its health for good or ill are its leaders and how they function to provide clarity and challenge in stress-filled situations.

Peter Steinke is an internationally respected church consultant, author, and speaker in the field of understanding congregations as systems. His presentation will help pastors and lay leaders become more effective leaders in their churches, to be, in his words. “calm and courageous, no matter what.”
